Turned out Cylinder three had the broken gasket, and was blowing soot all over cylinder 4. Turns out Cylinder 3 has a reputation with the Cummins 8.3 in diesel pushers for doing this about every 50,000 miles. The Cummins rep says not enough cool air reaches the engine. If the engine were in the front, this

I was just wondering how reliable the 8.3 Cummins in the M939 series trucks are? I have tried searching on SS and the Internet in general and it seems that the discussions always start going into the civy realm of things. I am considering trying to purchase one to just drive for fun and probably but a bobbed deuce bed on one. Thanks in advance.
