Macrobius Commentary On The Dream

Macrobius and dream theory. Macrobius was a Roman scholar who wrote a lengthy commentary on Cicero's Somnium Scipionis in c. 400 AD. Macrobius's commentary included an exploration of the nature of dreams based on the Greek dream-theory of Artemidorus from the second century AD.

Description. In around 430, the Latin grammarian and philosopher, Macrobius wrote Commentarii in somnium Scipionis, a commentary on the Dream of Scipio. Cicero's text forms the final section of his De re publica (Treatise on the Republic), a dialogue about the state of Roman politics and government, written between 54 and 51 BC.

This is a curious little text from late antiquity. Ostensibly, the book is a fifth century commentary on part of Cicero's De re publica. In reality, Macrobius uses the passage from Cicero (a charming dream sequence starring Scipio Africanus) as a jumping off point to discuss the nature of the universe and the soul.

From an 1100 copy of Macrobius' "Commentary on the «Dream of Scipio»". Little is known for certain about Macrobius, but there are many theories and speculations about him. He states at the beginning of his Saturnalia that he was "born under a foreign sky" (sub alio ortos caelo), and both of his major works are dedicated to his son, Eustachius.
